1812

Napoleon's invasion of Russia was the ultimate manifestation of a grandiosity that had lost touch with reality. The sheer size of his army defied control and administration. Napoleon's strategy took no account of Russian behavior. His tactics were brutally clumsy. His occupation of Moscow proved sterile.

Autumn 1812

Napoleon's disastrous retreat
from Moscow.

This retreat was undertaken not merely for military reasons but to enable Napoleon to re-establish control over a rapidly eroding base
of power.
